

Key Messages – Automated Speed Enforcement

- AMO is disappointed the Premier is banning municipal use of automated speed enforcement (ASE) or speed cameras as they're more often called.
- We know speed cameras work. People slow down, making our roads safer and protecting all of us – especially kids.
- We all care about road safety, but we also care about community safety. ASE also frees up police to focus on high priority crime which is what Ontarians want.
- This is also about personal responsibility. Speeders pay for enforcement and not the taxpayer. Studies show that most people approve of the use of ASE in school and community safety zones.
- If there's an issue of fairness or how cameras are used, municipalities are ready to work together with the province to strengthen the regulations.
- We can have safer streets while also having efficient and fair enforcement.
- Municipalities need a broad range of tools to improve road safety. Speed bumps don't work in every context.
- Municipalities know their local roads the road safety solutions that will work on them.
